A HALLIDAY FAMILY TREE

Chapter One

A Limited Genealogy

The title given to this publication is a conscious attempt to indicate its limited nature. It is basically not a record of the Halliday family - native to Dumfriesshire, Scotland - but of the descendants of one of them, John Holliday of the Scotch Line, Perth, Ontario. It is even limited to some of his descendants, those born to the surname. Reasons for thus confining it will be apparent.

First, exact knowledge of the line's ancestors prior to John Holliday is slight. It extends beyond him to two generations only. Moreover, facts about the members of those generations are limited to such items as their names, the dates of their birth or baptism, their place of residence and the vocations of a few of them. Such facts are included but no pretence is made that this constitutes a complete record of the family in that period.

Second, names of descendants of John Holliday through female lines are not incorporated. This is not to disparage their relationship to their Halliday ancestors or to dispute their right to inclusion in a family tree. It is due solely to practical difficulties. With the marriage of a female descendant the surname changed. Thus, within two generations after John Holliday some forty descendants bore thirty surnames other than his. With each succeeding generation the number increased. By the time this genealogical record was being compiled the variety of their names, their number and their geographical distribution made their inclusion impracticable.

Even within this limited scope the tree is not a complete one. Very little information exists about one member of the first generation, - Francis; and less about his descendants. In each branch of the other seven male members of that first generation some data are missing. In many of these instances where information has not been obtained it is a date or the name of a spouse or a fact of residence which is lacking, information often not too important to the family picture as a whole. Occasionally, however, a member of one of the earlier generations has been lost to view. Then several descendants with the family name may have existed or still exist; and this creates a significant blank in the record. In every such instance repeated efforts have been made to establish contact with some source of knowledge about the missing descendants. The lack of success is a matter of regret.

Two Parts To A Genealogy

Any adequate presentation of a family genealogical story must combine two elements. One is a genealogical chart which shows the names and lines of descent of its members. When possible it will include the dates of birth and death and the names of spouses. One comprehensive chart showing the family lines from the earliest known ancestor to the youngest present member is usually an interesting and desirable feature of a genealogical history. Unfortunately, the practical difficulty of providing one in sufficient detail and in an accessible form prevents its use in this study. The chart of this particular family tree is given in several parts. One includes the known ancestors of John Holliday, together with his own children. (Chart A.) Others are devoted to his descendants by the respective male lines. (Charts B. to H.) A member of any one line can readily construct from these a chart which would show his own lineage direct from the earliest known ancestor.

The companion to a genealogical chart consists of biographical sketches of the persons whose names appear on it. The reason for such is clear. While the chart shows the line of descent of each member in the family, thus establishing his or her relationship to all other members, it tells very little about the individual. The purpose of the biographical section is to set forth as succinctly as possible each member's career and thus his or her contribution to the story of the family as a whole. As may be supposed, a genealogical history (such as this one) compiled decades after the lifetime of some of its members will not be a complete story. At best it can be adequate for only some of them.

It may, however, reveal predispositions in such matters as vocation or achievement or longevity which suggest family characteristics.

The specific data to be given in the biographical section about any one member has been pretty well established by professional genealogists. This should include when possible four items:

1. Date and place of birth, parents' names, date and place of death.
2. Date of marriage, name of spouse and dates for the latter.
3. Details of career, including residence, education, vocation and significant achievements.
4. Issue of the union.

A Genealogical Number

It is common for each name on a family tree to be assigned a genealogical number. This makes it possible to locate a given individual's place in the lineage chart or the facts of his career in the biographical sketches with the minimum of effort. It should be noted, however, that such a number may have little or no genealogical significance. This will depend upon the system chosen by the compiler. Its basic purpose is to facilitate cross-reference.

In this family tree genealogical numbers of one digit are assigned to John Holliday's ancestors and to himself (for his direct ancestral line only), from number 1 for his grandfather to number 4 for himself. (See Chap. IV.)

A different system is used for his descendants. Here a four-digit number is assigned each member. In addition to being an identity number, it indicates two genealogical facts about the individual's place in the family tree. The first digit shows the generation to which he belongs, the remaining digits his genealogical place in that generation. Thus, the number 1008 is the number of the eighth member of the first generation; 2045 indicates the forty-fifth member of the second generation, and so on to 6007, - the number of the last member of the latest generation.

It is hoped this system of numbering may prove a convenience to the users of the tree.

Inclusion of Adopted Children

A genealogist must deal with the problem posed by the fact that a family usually includes members who have been adopted. Such members have an absolute right, legally and socially, to the family name. The problem arises only if the tree is considered as a record of the blood relationship existing through a given progenitor. Then an honest record would indicate when a member had become such through adoption. The compiler of a family tree must decide, therefore, whether genealogical descent or legal membership is to be the criterion.

In this tree neither name nor descent from a common ancestor is the deciding factor, but both. As already explained, it consists of descendants bearing the family surname. This has ruled out descendants through female lines because their surnames were different; and it rules out those given the name by adoption because their descent was different. However, the presence of both such members in any given family unit is shown by reporting of their names, though they are not continued as individuals in the line of descent nor given a genealogical number.

Chapter Two

Some Genealogical Problems

While the four basic features of a family tree have been established over the years, any given family may have specific features peculiar to itself. These can pose problems for the genealogist. At least one or two such confront one in the construction of this Halliday tree.

The Spelling of the Name

The first arises from the fact that John Holliday changed the traditional spelling of his family name. His earliest ancestor for whom authentic records exist was his grandfather, a parishioner of Moffat Parish Church, Dumfriesshire. In that church's Session record of his marriage in 1739 his name is spelled "George Haliday"; in its baptismal register when his first child was born it is "George Hallyday"; it is similarly spelled for the baptism of his fourth son, John, in 1745. After his removal of Hutton Parish the name is spelled "Halliday" on the church roil of membership there and it is so spelled in the baptismal records of his children born there. When a headstone was set up to his son John's memory in Hutton churchyard the spelling on it was "Halliday".¹ When John's younger son (the John who emigrated to Canada) was born in 1778 the parish minister was not registering births, so no record exists for that year.

In 1801, however, John was married and in that year a delayed registration of his birth was made. (See Frontispiece.) This must have been done at the instigation either of his widowed mother or of John himself. The spelling of his father's name on this registration as "Halliday" establishes the correct and legal spelling of his own name. It is not known when or why he changed the traditional "a" to "o". As late as December, 1815, after his arrival in Canada he signed his name "John Halliday". Thereafter he always used "o".²

If John Holliday's descendants had uniformly followed his spelling of the surname there would be no problem for the family tree of those descendants. There was, however, no uniformity among them. As a result, both the "a" and "o" spellings have existed down the years.

As would be expected, while John Holliday's children were young they all used the spelling he had adopted. Why the majority of them later changed to the traditional while some held to the newer form is not known. True, the seven surviving children who had been born in Scotland had been registered at birth as "Halliday", but there is no evidence that this was even known to them to be the legal spelling, let alone as being a reason for change. Yet five of the seven had effected the change during their lifetime. Conversely, the five children born in Canada were doubtless registered at birth or baptism as "Holliday", yet only two of them continued to use that form of the name throughout their life.

With the advent of the second generation the proportion of descendants adopting the "a" became still larger. No one of the seven branches that can be traced used the "o" spelling exclusively for all its members in the second generation. The numbers using the "a" increased. The particular usage adopted by any one line appears to have become fixed for the third generation of descendants.

The problem this presents to the genealogist can be appreciated. Neither lineage chart nor biographical sketch lends itself readily to show the spelling used by any given individual; for it should be noted that the form used by a father was not necessarily the one used by the son or daughter. In this family tree a member's name is spelled as he finally spelled it, even though his father may have used the other one. If the spelling used by a member has not been verified, the form used by his father is also used for him. The likelihood of error in this reporting is very great, and the compiler can only offer his regrets where error has taken place. In the statistical summary (Chap. VI) the number of descendants using each form is computed as accurately as possible.

The Pronunciation of the Name.

A second genealogical fact creating a problem for some of John Holliday's descendants arises out of the dual spelling of the surname. This is the pronunciation of it. While pronunciation is not a necessary element of a family tree, when the name does admit of more than one pronunciation it may well be considered a matter for comment.

The problem arises only for those members of the family who use the spelling "a". Those using the "o" pronounce the first syllable as in the word "hollow", - a correct pronunciation for their spelling. Among those who use the "a", however, two pronunciations are found; some pronounce the first syllable as in "hollow", while some pronounce it as in the word "hallow". The difference seems to arise from confusion about how a polysyllabic word in English is divided into its syllables for pronunciation. The basic rule is that each secondary syllable shall begin with a consonant. Then "Holliday" is divided Hol/li/day, the correct pronunciation being as shown above; while "Halliday" is divided Hal/li/day and the correct pronunciation of the first syllable will be as for the first syllable in "hallow". The origin of the confusion is simple enough. All descendants of John Holliday, whether using "o" or "a" in the spelling, have had an ancestor who at one time used "o" and, quite rightly, the pronunciation for that spelling. For some Hallidays, though the spelling was changed the pronunciation was not. Conformity to the rules of the language becomes a matter for personal decision.

A "Family Crest"

There exists in Canada and the United States a belief that many families whose ancestral origins were in Great Britain have the distinction of possessing what is known as "A Family Crest". This belief exists among descendants of John Holliday. On different occasions the compiler of this genealogical history has been told that such a crest exists for the Hallidays and that members of the family have "the right" to use it; or he has been shown what purports to be the family crest; or he has been asked about its existence. Neither knowledge of heraldry nor space in this history permits a full exposition of the subject, but perhaps a brief statement about it may answer questions asked by some of John Holliday's descendants. The information here given has been received direct from the Lord Lyon King of Arms, Edinburgh, who is the official responsible for heraldry in Scotland.

"There is no such thing as a "family crest" which a whole family can use". Such is the definitive statement by the Lord Lyon. Armorial bearings (more popularly known as a coat-of-arms) for Scots are granted by the British Crown through the Lord Lyon to an individual miry. This coat-of-arms has at least three parts: (a) the Shield, bearing the basic device; (b) the Crest on top of a helmet; (c) the Motto. When such a coat-of-arms is granted, the individual becomes for heraldic purposes the founder of a particular family, - composed of his children, grandchildren, etc. But the armorial bearings are his alone. They cannot be used by members of his family until, after his death, they become the personal bearings of the oldest male heir and of him alone. None of the other descendants is entitled to use either shield, crest, or motto until the Lord Lyon may issue-a subsidiary version of them, which will have some mark on the shield to differentiate it from the founder's shield. Usually no change is made on the crest or the motto, and this may account in some measure for the idea that a crest belongs to the whole family.

Specific information about the Hallidays in heraldic matters is not extensive. The Lord Lyon reports, "The important part of a coat-of-arms is the shield, and the Halliday shield bears a sword and a crescent....I find there are so far only two Halliday registrations and these are more related to the Hallidays of Kinross-shire (than to those of Annandale)." This writer has seen a Halliday headstone in Dornock Parish churchyard, Annandale, engraved with a shield which bears a scimitar (or sword) and three crescents. The Halliday commemorated was of Whinnyrig, an estate once belonging to a descendant of Sir John Halliday of Tullibodie in Clackmannanshire, which is adjacent to Kinross. The Lord Lyon writes, "the tombstone is not inconsistent with what we know of other Halliday registered arms."

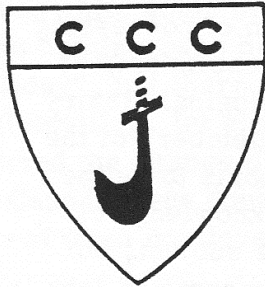

Descriptions of the crest to be found on Halliday arms are fairly frequent in books on Scottish heraldry. It is a boar's head. The motto above the crest is "Virtute Parta", - won by valour. One such crest is engraved in silver on an heirloom left by John Holliday to one of his descendants.³ The use of a crest by itself is condemned by heraldic authorities. One of them writes, "A crest in the U.K. cannot lawfully exist without its complementary coat-of-arms."⁴ The Lord

⁴ A.C. Fox-Davies, "A Complete Guide to Heraldry". (London, 1909)

Lyon says, 'It is not only illegal, but a social crime to use your Chief's arms ... You cannot have a crest without first having a shield of arms'.

It appears, then, that if a coat-of-arms were granted to an individual Halliday person it might combine the shield engraved on the Dornock headstone and the crest engraved on John Holliday's snuff-box. The motto would be "Virtute Parta". These would be something like the sketches herewith.

It may be noted, however, that on Sir Iain Moncrieffe's official reproductions of the arms of "Scottish Clans or Considerable Families", as approved by the Lord Lyon King of Arms⁵, none appears for the Halliday family, though 203 coats-of-arms are shown. It is not considered, apparently, a 'considerable' family. Assuredly, no armorial bearings were ever granted to John Holliday. So, while no law is known in Canada and certainly there is none in the United States prohibiting the use of an heraldic Shield or Crest or Motto, perhaps most of his descendants will think of any such device as a decorative item only, of no genealogical significance, and not to be described with any accuracy as "the family crest".

This coat of arms is reproduced from Clan Halliday, published in 1997 by Tom Carmody, grandson of Elizabeth Maye Holliday (4046)

Chapter Three

The Halliday Family ⁶

The Halliday family originated in the valley of the Annan River in Dumfriesshire, Scotland. The word 'Annan' is Celtic and probably meant 'slow running water'. The river has its source in an area of rugged hills some six miles north of the town of Moffat and its mouth thirty-two miles farther down when it empties into the Solway Firth.

At the river's source is a remarkable, awesome hollow in the hills known as the Devil's Beef Tub. A few hundred yards below the Beef Tub the glen begins to widen and take on the characteristic features of the Annandale watershed, -a gently flowing stream bordered by water meadows with rounded hills flanking the valley. At this point where Annandale begins stands the first farmstead of the dale, Corehead. Here, at Corehead, the Halliday family had its historical beginnings.

Long before recorded history identified a Halliday family, however, the name was known in Annandale and tradition had tales of its deeds. The name itself appears to derive from the Latin word 'allodi'. The supposition is that when the Roman legions penetrated the valley of the Annan they were struck by the fact that the peoples there - a mixed race of Pict, Celt, Dane and Saxon - lived on lands owned by themselves. That is, no near-feudal system existed, but one more nearly akin to freehold tenure. In their surprise at this social system the Romans called the inhabitants "the allodi", or "those who cultivate their own land".

Whatever the source of the surname, apparently a large proportion of the inhabitants of Annandale were known as Hallidays. A tradition concerning this exists from the time of the crusades. According to it, about the year 1190 A.D. Richard I of England had gone to Palestine on the Third Crusade. William I of Scotland had become a temporary vassal of Richard and was called upon to provide troops for the latter's assistance. He raised five thousand men whom he sent under the command of his brother, the Earl of Huntingdon. An old record states, "one thousand were from Annandale, and nearly all of them Hallidays". Allowing for some patriotic exaggeration by the narrator (possibly himself a Halliday), still the name must have been well established in the area and its numbers more than considerable.

An old quatrain of folk-verse, of later but uncertain date, gives another glimpse of the widespread distribution of the family in the dale, from where the Annan joins the Solway to the hill at the Beef Tub called Ericstane:

⁶ This chapter is an abridgement of Chapter Two in "John Holliday" by Clarence Halliday.

"Frae Annan-fit to Erickstane
Man and horse lang syne hae gane,
Neth greenwood gay; and a' the way
Upon the lands of Halliday"

It is not until 1297 that an individual Halliday of Annandale became known to verifiable history. He was Thomas Halliday of Corehead. The Halliday tower at Corehead, a combined fortress and residence, stood on a slight eminence within sight of the Beef Tub, an ideal site for defense or for living.

Thomas Halliday of Corehead was married to one of the two daughters of Sir Malcolm Wallace of Elderslie. He was thus a brother-in-law of the famous Scottish patriot Sir William Wallace. Thomas Halliday had a son, also Thomas, who was referred to by Sir William when speaking of his devoted followers as "Thom Halliday, my sister's son so dear". The family relationship to Sir William Wallace was a source of pride to many of the Halliday descendants.

Late in the thirteenth century Edward I of England interfered in the dynastic affairs of Scotland and the Scots resisted. Their leader was Sir William Wallace. Wallace was not, like many Scots chieftons, of Norman-noble birth, but his passion for freedom of noble and commoner alike, allied with his known valour, marked him as the acknowledged leader of the Scots forces.

Much slaughter accompanied the struggle. Sir Malcolm Wallace, father of Sir William and of the wife of Halliday of Corehead, was killed at Lochmaben a few miles south of Moffat. Not long out of his teens, Sir William with four of his followers, came to Corehead". So writes an historian of the period. "Here (at the home of his sister, Mrs. Thos. Halliday), was mustered the small devoted band who struck the first blow for Scotland's freedom from England". The Hallidays of Corehead were, thus, among the first of those "Scots wha hae wi Wallace bled".

Following victory for Wallace's army, Edward led his army of revenge into Scotland in 1228. Most of Wallace's Scots-nobles allies deserted him, making their own peace with Edward who defeated and captured Wallace. His death in the Tower of London followed.

Of course some who had fought with Wallace from the beginning had remained loyal to the end. Among such were the Hallidays of Annandale. Now, however, they were out of favour with those having honours to bestow. Apparently the family lost much of its earlier pre-eminence in the dale, its activities concerned less with the art of war and more with the less glamorous arts of peace.

Two or three centuries were to pass before traditional or recorded history of Annuadale makes mention of its Halliday members. During the lawless period of the seventeenth century when bands of moss-troopers ranged the border counties of England and Scotland mention of the family is rather in the realm of tradition and folk-lore than of history. The reivers of that period organized in their family bands to steal from neighbouring clansmen and to attack the settlement across the national border. Participation in the ravage by the Hallidays, while not to be entirely discounted, is to be found in tradition only.

One such makes their part a considerable one, even accounting for their surname from their reiving activity. An old Anglo-Saxon word which may well have survived in the border country was the word 'haligdaeg', meaning 'a festival'. This tradition declares that when a plundering expedition on the English was being organized the clansmen of Annandale used to sound the rallying cry, 'A halidaeg, a halidaeg', and gather on a small hill in the lower reaches of the dale not far above Annan town. As a result, the hill became known as Halliday Hill and the reivers who gathered on it as the Hallidays.

In some respects the tradition, like most traditions, may be well founded. Such a hill does exist, known by the family name. It is more than probable that any gatherings upon it would include members of the Halliday family. But to connect an activity of the seventeenth century with the origins of the Halliday name is to fly in the face of history. The name existed in Annandale centuries before the relying times.

While Hallidays would, doubtless, be participating at some points in the lawless activities of the reivers, it was probably a minor part. During the reigns of the latter Jameses and Queen Mary, when the national authority was trying to check the reivers, long lists of Border families were drawn up by the Privy Council of Scotland for punishment. These were sent down to the Chiefs of Annandale for action. The name of Halliday does not once appear on these lists, though numerous in the dale.

The family were, however, fervent supporters of the National League and Covenant of 1638. Their participation in Covenanter activity is never in dispute. When the Crown of the now-united Kingdoms tried to force the covenanters to conform to a contrary form of worship, the Hallidays resisted. Some of them paid for their temerity with their lives.

Meanwhile, the direct male line of the Hallidays of Corehead had failed in the fifteenth century. Before then younger members had fared forth from Upper Annandale, some of them going far afield. Several branches were thus established in England. One, Walter Halliday, a younger member of the Corehead family, was gifted musically and became Master of the Revels at the court of Edward IV, being known as Walter the Minstrel. His reward was the estate of Rodborough in Gloucestershire. Descendants included a Lord Mayor of London, a President of the East India Company, and one who became the personal physician to the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo. Some descendants settled in Yorkshire where the name was well known. One great-grandson of Walter married the heiress to the estate of Tullibodie in Clackmannanshire, Scotland, returning to live in the land of his ancestors. His son, Sir John Halliday, had descendants who went back to Annandale, notably to Dumfries. His family included Halliday of Whinnyrig and one, Andrew Halliday, who gained considerable fame as a physician.

One line never left Upper Annandale. Their direct descent from the Corehead family cannot be traced, but their continuing residence in the upper reaches of the dale is attested by many records. They have lived or still live in the parishes of Moffat, Wamphray, and Johnstone.

Early in the eighteenth century one such family was living on the estate of Dumcrieff, a mile or two from Moffat. In 1728 the owner of the estate established on it a corn-mill to grind flour and a wauk-mill to process cloth. By 1730 the wauk-miller was paying his rent, by 1733 he had had a new house built for him and before the end of the year he was reported to be "most diligent". This wauk-miller was apparently a Halliday, either himself George Halliday or with a son named George.

Certainly, in 1739 George Halliday, a wauk-miller, was living on Dumcrieff. On January 21, 1739, his banns of marriage to Mary Hastie were called for the third time in the Moffat Parish Church. They were married during the same week. George Halliday and Mary Hastie were the earliest known ancestors of the branch of the Hallidays which is the subject of this genealogical history.

Chapter Four

Scottish Ancestors

As already indicated, the direct ancestors of John Holliday of the Scotch Line, Perth, have been traced back two generations. Information concerning them is limited. It is confined to records of the Kirk Sessions of Moffat and of Hutton Parishes, to the registers of marriages and baptisms of the same parishes now in the Scottish Record Office at Edinburgh, and to family headstones in the Hutton Parish churchyard at Boreland. The family tree for this period, including John Holliday's own children, consists of four generations.

1. GEORGE HALLIDAY lived on the estate of Dumcrieff, near Moffat, Dumfriesshire, Scotland. His date of birth is unknown but was probably within the range of 1715 - 1720. He may have been born at Dumcrieff.

He married Mary Hastie during the week of January 21 - January 28, 1739. The marriage was performed by the minister of Moffat Parish, apparently at the bride's home. Due payment of 2s.6d was made to the Session by the groom "for being married out of the church".

George Halliday was a dyer and wauk-miller⁷, being one of a small community of artisans living on Dumcrieff. In 1746 he removed with his wife and their family of four sons to Berryscaur, Hutton Parish. His certificate of church membership from Moffat Parish church was received by the Hutton church on June 2, 1746. He seems to have practiced his trade at Berryscaur, passing on the craft to his sons and grandsons. The date and place of his death is unknown, no record of it being found in existing parish records. No stone to his memory stood in the parish churchyard in 1962.

Jean, born at Berryscaur, baptized Jan. 19, 1753.
William, born at Berryscaur, baptized Aug. 3, 1755.

2. JOHN - born at Dumcrieff to George Halliday and Mary Hastie, and baptized by the minister of Moffat Parish on March 11, 1745; died at Berryscaur, May 5, 1778.

He married Jean Dinwiddie (also spelled Jane Dinwoodie), who was born in 1741 and died at Dumfries in February, 1819.

⁷ For description of this family trade see "John Holliday", Chapter III.

John Halliday followed his father's trade of dyer and wauk-miller, living at Berryscaur. In 1778 an epidemic of some kind struck Hutton Parish with fatal results for many of its citizens, of whom John Halliday was one. He died on May 5, 1778, age 33 years, being buried in the parish churchyard where a stone stands to the memory of himself and his wife.⁸

Chapter Five

John Holliday's Descendants

This chapter contains the biographical sketches of John Holliday's descendants bearing the family surname. It is divided into ten sections, lettered (a) to (j), respectively. Eight of these sections are devoted to the descendants of his eight sons who lived to maturity and had issue. They are referred to as Branches I to VIII . Two sections are devoted to John Holliday's six daughters, Section (c) to the three born in Scotland, Section (h) to those born in Canada. Since their issue bore other than the Halliday surname, no extended chart or biographies are given for their children.

An effort has been made to provide a fairly complete biography for each of John Holliday's children, their respective careers being described more fully than are those of their descendants. It is unfortunate that much of the information which would have made such biographies fully adequate has been unobtainable. However, the general outline of their lives is reasonably clear. Where the shorter sketches of the later generations reveal blanks in the story, the deficiencies are not due to the compiler's indifference but largely to his inability to locate the required information, often after repeated efforts to do so.

Section (a) - JOHN Branch I

1001. JOHN - John Halliday was born Oct. 4, 1802, at Berryscaur, Hutton Parish, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, to John Halliday and Margaret Johnstone. He died Dec. 10, 1877, at Springtown, Renfrew County, Ontario.

In Mar. 1834, he married Catherine McNab, born in Perthshire, Scotland, on Mar. 12, 1813. She died at Springtown Apr. 9, 1908.

At the age of one year John moved with his parents to Boreland. There they occupied the apartment above the school-room where his father was the teacher. In due course he began his education in his father's school. In 1815 he came with his parents to Canada, living on the Scotch Line, near Perth, Ontario. He attended the elementary school taught by his father.

He took an active part in clearing the family homestead and very likely engaged in lumbering operations in the farther bush as a young man. He was entitled under the emigration contract of 1815 to receive one hundred acres of land from the Crown upon attaining the age of twenty-one. This grant he took up in Bagot Township, later a part of Renfrew County. It was a heavily timbered piece of land on the Madawaska River. The post office later established there was named Springtown. John's choice of this site for his homestead must surely have been affected by the magnificent stand of white pine upon it.

Lumbering of this pine was the main interest of the family. Many rafts squared timbers were floated down the rivers Madawaska, Ottawa, and St. Lawrence to Quebec City destined for Britain. Catherine McNab Halliday used to tell how as the trees were felled the small cleared areas were used primarily to provide grain and meat for the foresters. Lumbering, and not agriculture, was the primary industry.

On Apr. 9, 1834, John had brought his bride to the new homestead, which they named "Otterburn". As on other pioneer homesteads, the first house was a cabin of logs, and here their first child was born. It was soon succeeded by a larger house on the banks of a small stream flowing through the property and fittingly named Halliday Creek. Her nine other children were born to them. About 1859 a third more commodious house was built on the main road passing the homestead where Halliday Creek joined the Madawaska.

The household was a prominent one in the community. Catherine McNab belonged to a well-known family, her father being a cousin of "Chief" McNab, a Scot who had sought to establish himself in the Upper Canadian bush as a clan chieftain after Scots Highland fashion. Described as "a Woman of extraordinary intelligence", she made Otterburn homestead a centre for the neighbourhood life. In their home the Hallidays provided books which became a lending library to the settlers who came to live near them. The family were supporters of the Presbyterian Church at Burnstown some four miles down the river. Its earliest extant records (1870) carry the names of both parents and their older children as members.

John Halliday continued to reside at Otterburn even after his family had removed to their respective homes in other areas. Prior to his death his youngest son, James, took over the Otterburn property. John died at the age of 72 and was buried in the Springtown cemetery on the hill just east of "Otterburn".

Section (b) - WILLIAM Branch II

1002. WILLIAM - William Halliday was the second son of John Halliday and Margaret Johnstone, being born at Boreland, Hutton Parish, Dumfriesshire, Scotland. He was baptized on December 29, 1803. He died at Springtown, Renfrew County, Ontario, Nov. 15, 1883.

He married Ann McNab, a sister to his brother John's wife, probably about the year 1835. The date of her death is uncertain.

William's elementary education was received in his father's schools, the one in Boreland and the one on the Scotch Line, Perth, Ont. He came to Canada with his parents in 1815. In early youth he learned the trade of a plasterer, being described by one of his descendants as "an artistic plasterer", doubtless referring to his skill in the cornice and ceiling plaster decoration favoured in the XIX century. He himself refers to his trade in one of his poems when he speaks of himself as a man who "plaisters for my breid".

Upon attaining his majority he was eligible to receive a homestead of one hundred acres from the Crown. This he took up on Lot 18, Concession 5, of Bagot Township. This lot was west of his brother John's homestead at Springtown. There on a poor piece of land for agriculture he carried on farming and lumbering operations. He was to refer to it later in one of his poems as "Bagot's rocks and bogs".

William acquired considerable local fame for his verses celebrating the quarrels, feuds, or rivalries of the area, so that he was commonly known as "The Madawaska Poet". Senator Andrew Haydon in his "Pioneer Sketches in the District of Bathurst" has this to say about him as a poet:

"Of the time under review (about 1830) one of the workmen in the (James Harvey) mill was William Halliday, one of the twelve children of the old Scottish dominee who came with the settlers to Perth William Halliday was a bit of a wag and a poet withal. Some there are who remember from the lips of their fathers or grandfathers his description of the settlements at and around Harvey's Rapids in the days before it had grown in consequence and prosperity into Pakenham Mills. Unfortunately, but little of the production has survived the wasting years - but enough, however, to show that "the lust of the eye and the pride of life" had already a footing even in the struggling life of Pakenham's pioneers:

"McCarthy determined to raise him a castle; He summoned his neighbours, his wish to fulfill, That he might surpass all the country around him And crawl over Harvey, who lived at the mill".

The poem from which this extract was taken may well have been composed about the time of William's marriage, for Pakenham (or Harvey's Mills) was near to White Lake, where Ann McNab lived. It also indicates that William was not depending upon income from his Bagot land for a living, accepting employment in the limited industrial life of the area.

William's career as a poet continued throughout his life, a kind of hobby to lighten the hard labour incident to farming and lumbering on the Madawaska. Only one complete work has survived.¹⁰ Apparently there were quite a number of such poems composed through the years, all in manuscript form. One story has it that they were sent to a newspaper office for publication and were destroyed when the office burned. Another says they disappeared when the homestead burned. Whatever the circumstances, one of his granddaughters summed up the tragedy succinctly, "All his writings were lost. All those years of work:" The poetic fire seems to have burned late, for this granddaughter, who live her early years in his house, recalled him in his later years "Spending most of his time sitting by the fire, where he wrote all the time and sat musing".

Like many of the early settlers, William Halliday, took part in municipal life and for a time was the Township Clerk. The family attended the Presbyterian church at Burnstown some four miles away, a distance which they walked on Sunday mornings. William died at age 80 and interment was made in Springtown Cemetery.

Section (c) - JANE, JANET, JAMES and MARY

1003. JANE - A first daughter was born to John Halliday and Margaret Johnstone at Boreland, Hutton Parish, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, and named Jane. She was baptized on August 9, 1805.

Apparently she was named after her paternal grandmother. The latter's name was spelled in different sources as "Jane" or "Jean", which in Scotland were variants of the same proper name. This granddaughter was, however, always known in the family as "Jane". After a long life of eighty-seven years she died on February 2, 1892, at Chesley, Ontario, with burial at Williamsford, Ont.

Jane received her elementary education in her father's school at Boreland and came to Canada with her parents at the age of ten in 1815. There she lived on the Scotch Line, near Perth, attending the school taught by her father.

In July, 1827, she was married to Thomas Dobie by the Rev. William Bell of First Presbyterian Church, Perth. According to Mr. Bell her marriage to Dobie was bitterly opposed by her father. Mr. Bell's "Journal" records the event: "On a day in July, Thomas Dobie and Jean (sic) Holliday, two of my parishioners, came to be married. The bride's father was absent, as he pretended to be displeased with the match, though there was no apparent reason why he should be so. I was sorry for the poor bride, thus to be discountenanced by her nearest relatives at a time when she stood in need of every encouragement. She cried all the time of the ceremony and I believe solely for this cause. For some months after, too, I occasionally saw her in tears in the church, her father and mother having passed her in the street without speaking. This was not only unreasonable, but cruel, for the match was an equal one, and the young man was not only sober and industrious, but pious".

Apparently the Dobies continued to reside in the Perth area for some years, where Jane is said to have taught school for a brief period. Their son John attended his grandfather's school on the Scotch Line at one time. Later the family moved to the Spencerville area where they lived east of that town on a site which became and is still known as Dobie's Corners. Still later the family, its older members nearing maturity, moved westward to Williamsford, Grey County, where Jane's sister Janet and her husband A.S. Elliot had pioneered near Williamsford and Chesley. One son, Francis, remained at Dobie's Corners where his descendants still live. The other members of the family went with their parents to the newer Huron Tract.

The Dobies remained staunch Presbyterians, Jane herself and several descendants giving their allegiance to the strict Calvinist beliefs practised by her father, John Holliday. On the occasion of her death in Chesley, an obituary summed up her life in these words: "She saw Perth grow from a single government store (of 1816) to a thriving town, and bore her share of all the hardships incident to the first settlers. She was a strict Presbyterian, and died in the firm belief of salvation through the merits of her Saviour".

1004. JANET - On March 7, 1807, a second daughter was born to John Halliday and Margaret Johnstone at Boreland, Hutton Parish, Dumfriesshire, Scotland. She was baptized on March 21st, being given the name "Janet". As in the case of her older sister, the given name had variant form, "Jessie"; and this form was quite commonly used in the family of this second daughter. She died at Chesley, Ont., on Feb. 4, 1889, interment being made in the cemetery at that place.

Janet came to Canada with her parents in 1815, where she lived until her marriage on the Scotch Line, near Perth, receiving her elementary education in her father's school on the Line. On December 29, 1829, she married Adam Scott Elliot the son of William Elliot who also had emigrated to Canada in 1815 and settled near Perth. He and John Holliday had been close friends, being of one mind in matters of religious faith and conduct in the Presbyterian Church there. The marriage of their children would doubtless receive the paternal blessings.

Following marriage the Elliots lived until 1844 on a homestead where, according to A. S. Elliot's obituary, "in 13 years he had cleared a large farm, had it well stocked and was free from debt". In 1844 they quit the farm and removed to a mill site on the Tay River six miles from Perth, where they operated a mill. In 1856 they moved west to Sullivan Township, Grey County, where in the neighbourhood of Williamsford they again built mills. One such was built on the north branch of the Saugeen River in Bruce County, to which site the family moved. Here the municipality of Chesley was established, to become the Elliot's permanent home.

The town's founder prospered, with financial interests extending from the original milling operations to land, business, and banking activities. In all such he was ably supported by his wife. They continued in the form of Presbyterianism approved by their respective fathers, establishing a congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in Chesley, where its successor still maintains the witness of the "Cameronian" faith.

1005. JAMES - Born in 1808, baptized Nov. 28 of that year, in Boreland, Hutton Parish, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, to John Halliday and Margaret Johnstone. died in infancy.

1006. MARY - a daughter, Mary, was born in 1810, baptized May 6 of that year in Boreland, Hutton Parish, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, to John Halliday and Margaret Johnstone. She died in Spencerville, Ontario, on Aug. 16, 1904, with interment at that place.

In 1815 Mary came to Canada with her parents. At the age of eighty she gave an account to the local newspaper (Almonte, Ont.) of her emigration to Canada and of the settlement of the family on the Scotch Line near Perth. In this she said that when her father and his family reached what was to be his future home he and his neighbours put up a "shanty", while her mother "sat down at the foot of a big basswood tree" along with her eight children, one of whom was but a few weeks old. In this pioneer settlement Mary grew up. Her formal education was received in her father's school on the Line, her religious training in a Calvinist household and First Presbyterian Church in Perth. This strict discipline had a marked and continuing effect upon her life.

In 1827 at the age of seventeen Mary married Archibald Fraser and removed to his farm a mile or two up the Line. There four sons and four daughters were born to them. In 1845 her husband was killed in an accident with the first power-driven threshing machine to be used on the Line. Mary was left to raise a family whose ages ranged from 17 years to 3 months. "With that indomitable perseverance characteristic of Scotch women" - so wrote the local newspaper - "she kept her family together. On the evening of the funeral of her late husband, Mrs. Fraser handed her eldest son the Bible and asked him to take his father's place". After the family had established themselves in various places, Mary left the farm in her son James' care, building herself another smaller house on one corner of the homestead. There her father lived with her for the last eight years of his life.

About 1870 Mary removed to Perth where she resided for some years, then to Almonte, Ontario, where she lived with her daughter Jessie and finally to Spencerville, Ontario, where her death took place in 1904.

Mary Holliday Fraser (and she retained the spelling used by her father) was a woman of strong character. This was made evident when at the age of 35 she undertook the problems of a frontier farm and a family of eight children unaided, and with considerable success. Grandchildren who had known her retained memories of incidents which do much to reveal her basic attitude to life. They were usually rooted in her religious faith, the stern Calvinism of the "Cameronian" discipline. A few such may be told.

Her choice of Almonte as a place of residence was influenced largely by the fact that in that village there was an active congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. As she became hard of hearing in her later years that church provided her with a seat specially placed immediately below the pulpit, that she might miss no part of the sermon. The "Sabbath" was observed in strict fashion. No beds were made that day, no meals cooked. When settlers on the Scotch Line might be in Perth it was customary for them to collect any mail for neighbours. Frequently such mail would be distributed on a Sunday following the Saturday visit to town. If a letter for Mary Fraser was so distributed it was put up on the clock-shelf, unopened until Monday morning. Her church disapproved of the use of hymns in public worship. When Mary lived in Spencerville, where the Presbyterian Church used hymns, she went with the family but refused to join in the service of praise and even to carry a hymn book. She approved of the criticism made by her Almonte minister of a hymn by Joseph Addison which concludes,

"For, O!, eternity's too short
To utter all Thy praise";

He showed how false the doctrine in a hymn can be by slamming a hymn book shut and declaring "Eternity is long enough for anything".

Her interpretation of religious truth influenced her attitude towards more "secular" elements in life, especially the newer procedures of the younger generations. When her grandchildren who lived with her in Almonte showed an interest in the new feminine fashion of the bustle, her comment was, "If you had been born with a hump you wouldna like it". A story is told of how Mary once visited in Chesley, where her sisters Jane and Janet were living. Her younger relatives there wished to have a photograph of her. She is said to have refused to have it taken on the grounds that it was "making an image", and the picture had to be taken by stealth. This story bears the mark of confusion of persons, in which Mary may have been confused with her sister Jane.

No photograph of the latter is known to exist, while one of Mary, obviously a posed picture, does. If the Chesley story was correct, Mary must have changed her theological view at a later date.

Section (d) - GEORGE Branch III

1007. GEORGE - George Halliday was born at Boreland, Hutton Parish, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, to John Halliday and Margaret Johnstone, being baptized on April 5, 1812. He died at Perth, Ontario, on May 4, 1895, burial being made in the Presbyterian section of the old Perth Cemetery.

About the year 1830 he married Ellen Elliot. She was a daughter of William Elliot, one of the original pioneers on the Scotch Line and a close friend of John Holliday. Her brother, Adam Scott Elliot, had married George's sister, Janet. Ellen Elliot died Feb. 8, 1909, at the age of ninety-three.

In 1815, when three years old, George Halliday had been brought to Canada by his parents. There he lived on the homestead near Perth and attended his father's school on the Scotch Line. The story of his adult life is not complete in details, family records having been lost years later in a fire. It appears, however, that George - like his younger brother James - took up farming at an early age in the immediate neighbourhood of the homestead.

In 1829 his father had bought the hundred acre farm adjoining the family homestead to the south - Lot A, Concession 9, North Burgess. For the next forty-two years this farm was in the legal possession of John Holliday's family, owned in succession by Calvin, George, James, Margaret and finally by George again. He sold it out of the family in 1871.

It appears likely that George farmed this land upon his father's purchase of it and upon marriage about 1830 established his home on it. His first child, John, was born in 1832, his second, Margaret, in 1835. A baptism record for the latter states that her birth took place on Lot A, Concession 9, of North Burgess, and probably all his children were born there.

Later, George lived on an adjoining property to the south, Lot 2, Con. 9, where he is said to have built a stone house which still stands there.

Section (e) - JAMES BRANCH IV

1008. JAMES - James Halliday was born to John Halliday and Margaret Johnstone at Boreland, Hutton Parish, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, being baptized there on January 29, 1814. He died on October 3, 1909, at Perth, Ontario, with burial in Elmwood Cemetery at that place.

At the age of eighteen months he was taken to Canada to settle on the Scotch Line near Perth, Ontario. There he attended the elementary school taught by his father.

On January 29, 1839, he married Janet Allan, a daughter of Francis Allan who had been one of the pioneers on the Scotch Line. A family of twelve was born to the union, two of whom died in infancy. Janet Allan died in 1899 (at the age of seventy). Subsequently James married twice, to Elizabeth Crawford on March 13, 1891, and upon her death to Sarah Ann Turner on December 8, 1899.

James continued to farm throughout his active life, living on his father's homestead. He bought the homestead in 1846, paying his father £330 for the freehold. In 1876 he sold the farm to James Armour for $5,600. The plot of land in which his parents and two siblings were buried was "reserved" from the sale, and right of access to it by members of the Halliday family was guaranteed in perpetuity. In the same year he retired to Perth where he resided until his death.

He took an active interest in municipal affairs, being Reeve of North Burgess for a number of years and the Township's representative on the County Council. His obituary in the Perth Courier stated: "In politics he was a Conservative and in religion a Presbyterian". This religious affiliation must have existed in four different Perth congregations. From 1817 to 1830, it was First Presbyterian from 1830 to 1836, St. Andrew's Church of Scotland; from 1836 to 1845, Reformed Presbyterian (Cameronian). In 1845 Knox Church was established in Perth, a congregation of the Free Presbyterian Church, and James became a charter member of it. He was a member of its Board of Management until a few years before his death and the teacher of the congregation's Bible Class for many years.

Upon his death in 1909, his obituary in the local paper, after recording events in his life, summed up his character in the words, "He was a man of common-sense ideas, practical in everything and his opinion was always sought for and valued".

Section (f) - FRANCIS ... Branch V

1009. FRANCIS - Francis was the first child born in Canada to John Holliday and Margaret Johnstone. His birth took place on June 2, 1816, at Brockville, Ontario. His coming appears to have occasioned a change in what must surely have been his parents' plans for settlement on their homestead land.

The settlers at Brockville were impatient to move to the newly surveyed area at Perth and only stayed at Brockville until word was received that the depot at Perth was ready to assign homesteads. It was ready in April, 1816 and the first settlers arrived on the 17th. However, John Holliday, the settlers' schoolmaster and frequently their "spokesman", was not among them. Apparently Francis was the unwitting cause thereof. With Margaret Johnstone advanced in pregnancy, the rough bush trail from Brockville to Perth would be a serious hazard to mother and unborn child alike. So Francis was born at Brockville and not until July did the family with its new member reach their future home on the Scotch Line.

Like his brothers and sisters, Francis received elementary education in his father's school. As a young man he learned the trade of saddler, or harnessmaker, and built a two-storey house and store at the Little River, Gore Street, Perth, where he carried on his business.

In 1838 Francis married Helen Glossip and on July 5, 1839, a daughter was born to them. It is probable that this child was named Jessie (or Janet). A second daughter was born on December 7, 1841, and was named Helen. His wife died on February 20, 1842, and the new baby died in the same year on June 11th. A stone stands to their memory in the Presbyterian section of the old Perth cemetery.

On December 27, 1842, Francis was remarried to Margaret McEwan of Carleton Place, the ceremony being performed by the minister of St. Andrew's Church, Perth. A son was born September 24, 1843 but the name given him is unknown.

At the time covered by his two marriages, Francis was a prominent member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church (Cameronian) in Perth. When that congregation was formed in 1836, and his father was inducted as one of its two ruling elders, Francis was elected one of the two deacons of the congregation. This made him responsible along with his fellow deacon for the secular affairs of the congregation. Since he was just twenty years of age at the time (and his older brothers George and James were also members of the church) it presupposes a degree of business competence in the youth. When the last meeting of this church's session was held on August, 16, 1856, Francis was in attendance. So for twenty years of its life in Perth the Cameronian Churches had had Francis Holliday as one of their more active members.

During these years Francis was operating his saddlery, the Canada Directory reporting his business there up to and including its issue of 1853 but not thereafter. The Rev. Mr. Bell reports what was probably the reason for its discontinuance. In his diary for September, 1855, he wrote "Two frame buildings on the island burned, belonging to Francis Holliday". It may be assumed that this loss of his house and store led Francis to consider a future career in the more westerly part of the Continent and more particularly in the United States, then offering attractive incentive to youth. For from then on (with the exception of his church's last meeting of its Session) no record of Francis' life in the Perth area has been found.

Indeed, no verified record of his life after his departure has been found. Many years later his niece, Jean, the youngest daughter of his brother James and born in 1865 - penciled a note opposite his name on a list of family members of his generation. It reads: "Went south, never heard from; daughter Jessie came once, before my day". A nephew is said to have identified the place in the "south" as Ohio, U.S.A. No verification of this has been discovered. It is, of course, quite possible and even likely that the daughter Jessie had visited the Perth relatives prior to 1865. Other similar penciled notes about other relatives have been verified. So Jessie's name may be included on the family tree as a true descendant of John Holliday.

Further information about Francis and his branch of the family awaits discovery.

Section (g) - DAVID ... Branch VI

1010. DAVID - David Holliday was born on February 28, 1818, on the Scotch Line, Perth, Ontario, to John Holliday and Margaret Johnstone. In his "Journal" for Sunday, May 31, 1818, the Rev. Mr. Bell of First Presbyterian Church, Perth, had this entry: "In the afternoon (I preached) at the home of Mr. Fraser. I baptized a child for Mr. Holliday". In all probability this child was the three-month old David.

In October, 1841, The Rev. Mr. Bell sold him a building lot on Drummond Street in Perth for £30, describing David as "a young tanner just going into business". He built a dwelling house on the lot. In 1870 he was advertising in the Perth Courier that he had a "spring stock of boots and shoes: remember the right place, opposite the Market Buildings".

On August 11, 1843, David was married to Christena Sinclair, the contracting parties being described on the marriage certificate as "both of the Township of Drummond". It refers to the groom as of "the parish of Hutton, Lanark Co., Scotland". It is an odd mixture of error. David could scarcely be of Hutton, Scotland, and of Drummond, Upper Canada. Moreover, he had never lived in Hutton Parish, having been born in Mr. Bell's own parish on the Scotch Line. His father had indeed been born there, though Hutton is not in Lanark Co., Scotland, but in Dumfriesshire. One of the witnesses who signed the certificate was David's father, John Holliday, who might have been expected to notice the errors. Perhaps it was the sole occasion upon which he failed to set the minister right!

David's business in Perth prospered. Sometime between 1870 and 1875, adversity struck. One story says he backed a friend's note for a large sum, had to redeem it and so lost everything except his house and its furnishings. A different story blames a reciprocity treaty with the United States which allegedly bankrupted David's business. Since the reciprocity treaty of 1854 had been abrogated in 1866, the abrogation rather than the enactment of such a treaty must have been the cause of the reverse if this version is the correct one. Whatever the cause, David's business career in Perth came to an end.

He moved to Almonte, where he established a grocery store. He was extremely fond of children. Many years later a citizen of Almonte, who as a child had known the experience, said "He treated all children who came to his store. A child never went out without something".

David was a devoted member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, (Cameronian), having been a member of it from its organization in Perth in 1836 and until 1856 when its congregation there disbanded. In Almonte he united with it there and was ordained an elder of the congregation on July 8, 1875. He was described by one of its members as "a devout, good-living man, who never missed a church service, a familiar figure on the Sabbath wearing a high hat and with a Scots plaidie wrapped around him". In his obituary in the local Almonte paper he was said to have been "gifted to some extent in the poetic line". None of his compositions seems to have survived except for the oddity of an advertisement for his store in Perth which was made in rhyming couplets.

He retired from business in 1897-98 and went to live in the Home for the Aged, Allegheny City, Pa., where the Reformed Presbyterian Church had an institution for its senior members. He died there on October 9, 1900. Burial was made in the Auld Kirk Cemetery, Almonte.

Section (h) - ELIZABETH, MARGARET, AGNES

1011. ELIZABETH - In October, 1819, a daughter, Elizabeth, was born on the Scotch Line, Perth, Ontario, to John Holliday and Margaret Johnstone. She died in infancy in 1821, burial being made in a plot on the homestead Lot A, Concession 10, N. Burgess. This use of farmstead property for burial purposes was quite frequent at that time, since establishment of communal cemeteries was a later development.

1013. MARGARET - Margaret Holliday was born on December 22, 1823, on the Scotch Line, Perth, Ontario, to John Holliday and Margaret Johnstone.

As was the case for her brothers and sisters, she received an elementary education in her father's school on the Line.

Margaret married John Morrison. Dates concerning the family found in church records and newspaper items conflict in such way that an absolutely correct chronological record may be impossible. An approximately correct one is as follows.

John Morrison, born in 1814, at Thurso, Caithness, Scotland, was probably a son of Alexander Morrison, one of the original settlers on the Scotch Line. His first wife was Mary Taylor, also of the Line. There was no issue of their union. His second wife was Margaret Holliday. John Morrison bought a farm between Port Elmsley and Smiths Falls. There a son was born to him and Margaret Holliday and named William John.

This son was baptized in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Almonte, (Cameronian) on April 1, 1866. Both parents were Cameronians and it appears probable that the infant was taken the considerable distance from the Elmsley farm to the Almonte Church because the latter was the only one of that faith in the area.

In 1880, their son died at the age of fourteen, "after which" (according to John Morrison's obituary) "Mr. Morrison sold his farm and moved to Perth". He had learned the trade of stone-mason and possibly followed that trade during part of the twelve years lived in Perth. In 1892 he and his wife moved to Almonte. Margaret's brother David and his sister Mary (Fraser) already lived in that town and their presence there may well have influenced the decision to move there. In his obituary the Almonte newspaper states the Morrisons "came to live in Almonte in order to be near the Reformed Presbyterian Church, to which body they belonged". While this may not have been the only reason, it may well have been the deciding one.

John Morrison died in 1898. His headstone in the Auld Kirk Cemetery bears an epitaph ostensibly directed to his widow:

"Weep not for me my partner dear,
I am not dead, but sleeping here,
Short was my time of earth poss'ed
To call me home God thought was best".

The theology implied may or may not be accepted by everyone; but surely all will agree that 85 years "of earth possessed" cannot be considered a "short time".

Margaret died on April 15, 1908, also aged 85 years, and was buried beside her husband in the Auld Kirk Cemetery.

1014 AGNES - In November 1824, a daughter, Agnes, was born on the Scotch Line to John Holliday and Margaret Johnstone. She died in August, 1825, age 10 months, with interment in the burial plot on the family homestead.

Section (i) - ISAAC ... Branch VII

1012. ISAAC - Isaac Halliday was born to John Holliday and Margaret Johnstone in August, 1821, on the Scotch Line, near Perth, Ontario.

In 1848, he married Elizabeth Moffat, who had been born in 1826 in the same area.

Isaac received his elementary education in his father's school on the Scot Line. Like two of his older brothers, he learned the trade of harness-making, a calling much in demand in the "horse and buggy" days of the nineteenth century. Shortly after marriage, Isaac and his wife removed to the Huron Tract in Western Ontario. His younger brother, Calvin, also settled in that part of the Province about the same time. The brothers took up residence in small villages some twenty-five miles apart.

The youthful harness-maker took employment in Goderich with Mr. Horace Horton, whose shop was on Hamilton Street, in the village. He made his home, however, in a smaller community called Saltford, just across the Maitland River from the village and below the hill upon which the village stood. His family of two sons and six daughters were born there. In 1869 the family moved into Goderich.

In the spring of 1882, Isaac removed to Milton, North Dakota, accompanied by his two sons and by some of his daughters. It was another instance of the Western plains beckoning to younger generations with its promise of free homestead land.

This time a less common situation existed, the presence with the party of the sixty year old previous generation.

In the very year of the removal to the prairies, Isaac's wife, Elizabeth Moffat, died. For some time he continued to practise his trade, later purchasing a small holding near Milton which he used as a market garden. When no longer able to continue his gardening he went to live with his son John on the latter's homestead nearby.

He died on October 14, 1907, at the age of eighty-six burial being made at Milton.

Section (j) - CALVIN ... Branch VIII

1015. CALVIN - The youngest child of John Holliday and Margaret Johnstone was born on the Scotch Line, Perth, Ontario, on October 10, 1826. He was baptized by the Rev. William Bell of the First Presbyterian Church on Nov. 12th of that year. Mr. Bell recorded the event in his "Journal".

"What is in a name? has often been asked. Much, it we are to believe what we hear and see. On Sunday, Nov. 12, Mr. Holliday, who is a staunch Calvinist, had his child christened by the name of John Calvin, in honour of the Geneva pastor. He had a John in his family before, and I reminded him of it, but he said it did not signify, he was determined to have the name in full."

"John Calvin" it became; and in the family bible where John Holliday personally recorded his children's names this was the only one entered with two given names. Within the family he was known as Calvin.

On February 22, 1848, Calvin married Agnes Allan (a younger sister of his brother James' wife, Janet Allan), born March 4, 1830, also a native of the Scotch Line. Shortly after the birth of their first child, they removed to Brussels, Ontario, in the recently opened Huron Tract. There he engaged in his trade of carpentry, concentrating upon the manufacture of wooden pumps, an article much in demand in those days in both town and country.

Apparently he discontinued the use of the name "Calvin" upon his arrival in Brussels. There he was known as "John C.", both by the community and by his immediate family. On the family headstone in Brussels, his name appears four times and every time it is given as "John C. Halliday".

While discarding the surname of the Genevan reformer for general use, he had in 1849 and before his removal to Brussels given it to his older son, though the latter was always known as "John". Whatever his reason, Calvin had not thereby turned away from Protestant Reformation thought. In 1853 when his second son was born the child was named "Martin Luther". A family whose head was John Calvin and whose two oldest sons were respectively John Calvin and Martin Luther could not be anything but of the Protestant faith. His church connection with Melville Presbyterian Church, Brussels, bore that out.

Calvin became the heir and his descendants the custodians of one of the most important items among the lares and penates of John Holliday. The latter had brought with him from Scotland a family clock, one of the type commonly known as a grandfather's clock. It had regulated the hours throughout the pioneer years on the Scotch Line. According to Scots custom the family clock descended to the youngest son. John Holliday himself had been a youngest son, so the clock might conceivably have come to him upon his birth in 1778 when his father died. Be that as it may, this clock became in due course the property of Calvin. He, in turn, bequeathed it to his youngest son, George. It went to Western Canada with its new owner, who passed it on to his only son, Carlyle. In 1963 the clock was in the latter's care in Saskatoon, Sask., and at that time the heirs-apparent for two succeeding generations were another Calvin and a Richard Halliday, respectively.

Calvin died on Sunday, December 10, 1911. His life had not been without its trials, for he had seen his wife and four of his children die before him, Agnes Allan having died on March 6, 1899. Yet, if the epitaph engraved on his tombstone was inspired by himself, he had remained staunch in the Presbyterian belief of Divine guidance so logically advocated by the first John Calvin, whose name he bore. The epitaph is the second verse of the fortieth psalm: "And on a rock he set my feet, establishing my way".

Statistical Analysis

A statistical analysis of a family tree has limited value. It can have an absolute value only if the tree includes all the descendants, with complete data about each one. This tree does not have that degree of perfection.

One of its eight male branches (Francis) is virtually unrepresented. In one branch (John) a second generation family and its probable descendants have been completely lost to view. In yet another (David) one Later family consisting of several members is known to exist, but no verified data can be obtained about them. And in every branch there are individuals for whom some information is lacking, information necessary for accurate statistical use. Consequently, the statistical analysis of this particular family tree is not one which will commend itself unreservedly to the mathematicians, the accountants and the astronomer who are members of the family.

At the same time, such an analysis is not without some value. Thus, the tree includes more than 85% of the descendants of John Holliday who bore the family surname, even when allowing for a maximum number of missing persons.

Further, when information is lacking about individuals on it, it is usually data about a place of birth, the name of a spouse, or an exact date, and seldom concerns the individual's career or place of residence. The figures may be taken, therefore, as a reasonable statistical summary of family history in the four categories selected as suitable for numerical representation.

Number of Descendants

There are 420 names of descendants of John Holliday who were born to the surname and for each of whom some verification of his or her life exists. Of these, 204 are male, 216 are female.

Descendants in each of the eight male branches number as follows:

Branch I	(John's)	54
Branch II	(William's)	50
Branch III	(George's)	71
Branch IV	(James').....	133
Branch V	(Francis').....	4
Branch VI	(David's)	47
Branch VII	(Isaac's).....	32
Branch VII	(Calvin's)	29

Longevity

The life span of these members has ranged from 96 years to a few weeks. While the family has no centenarians, it has had 9 members who lived to be over 90, 27 who have lived into the eighties, and 36 who have been in the seventies. Thus 72 persons have exceeded the allotted Biblical span. This total is over 17% of the family. Comparison with the longevity figures for the general public over the same period of time would be necessary for a valid conclusion, but perhaps the belief commonly held by many Hallidays that they are a long-lived family may be soundly based.

Vocations

A second historical element which allows of statistical report is that of the vocations followed by the family's members. Obviously, these must be confined to those who have reached adulthood. The number of these has been 320, approximately 76% of the family.

Since three-hundred-and-twenty persons living over a period of one-hundred-and-twenty-one years have had among them a great variety of vocations, it has been necessary to group together those vocations with similarities, so that the number might not be unwieldy. This has made possible six vocational categories. When a member changed vocations he has been included in the one followed by him for the more significant part of his career. The vocational summary (as a percentage of the family's adult members) then is as follows:

Household duties	35%
Professional careers	22%
Business life	15%
Tradesmen.....	11%
Agriculture.....	9%
Clerical and office careers	8%

Professions

While each of those six categories allows of further breakdown, there are probably greater variations among the professions than in some of the others. Moreover, these differences have usually been discovered more exactly. Hence a detailed analysis of the professional careers (as a percentage of the family's professional careers) may be enlightening. It is as follows:

Teaching.....	35%
Nursing.....	18%
Engineering	14%
Accountancy	8%
Medicine	6%
Pharmacy	6%
Law.....	4%

This breakdown accounts for only ninety-one percent of the professions followed. The balance consists of those professions where only one member of the family is found in each/such as the Church, dentistry, journalism, astronomy, aeronautics.

Geographic Distribution

It is not surprising that a North American family spanning the years from 1815 to 1963 and comprising six generations should have spread widely over the Continent. They have lived from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Originating in the eastern part of Upper Canada, (later the Province of Ontario), it followed the pattern set by that Continent's settlement. As will be seen by a statistical summary of the family's distribution, a majority of its members have remained Canadians, though a large minority have become citizens of the United States. The 420 members on the tree have lived the whole or the more significant part of their lives in the following areas:

Canada	291	(Eastern Canada - 184)
The United States	123	(Western Canada - 107)
Panama Canal Zone	4
Northern Ireland	1
Angola, W. Africa	1
	420

The Spelling of the Name

Members have adopted one or other of the two ways in which the surname is spelled in the following numbers:

Halliday	313
Holliday	101
Not Known	6

A Personal Postscript

The compilation of this family tree has proved to be an absorbing hobby for retirement years. It has followed naturally upon the writing of the story "John Holliday". It has entailed much correspondence, a considerable amount of reading, some travel, and many hours of time. It has revealed facts about the family history hitherto unknown to me and has introduced me to relatives whose very existence had been unsuspected by me.

I wish to pay a first tribute to these relatives. I have corresponded with 93 of them, not all of them Halliday by name, but all of whom might be expected to contribute information useful for inclusion in the family tree. An overwhelming majority responded. Many of them showed a continuing interest by supplying information again and again. Without their help this family tree could not have been compiled or would have been much less complete. I wish to thank them most sincerely.

Relatives have not been the only assistants I have had. In not a few instances it was known that a member of an earlier generation had gone to Western or Northern Ontario, to the North-Western United States or the Canadian Prairies. There new lines of the family had been established. But beyond the name of a village or a given area nothing was known of them by relatives in the East. My procedure to establish contacts was to write to a municipal official or a post-master or a newspaper publisher asking for any information about the Hallidays who had once lived in their area. Seven times this procedure resulted in contacts being established with the descendents of no fewer than four branches of the family. My thanks are due to these anonymous citizens, some of them Canadians, some Americans, who courteously responded with clues which resulted in discovery of long-separated Hallidays.

Another source of valued genealogical information was in contemporary records of the lives of members. Such records range from church registers of baptisms to epitaphs upon cemetery tombstones. Some of the facts were discovered by personal visit or search, some came from family bibles, some were supplied by newspaper editors from articles in their files, some were obtained from government offices for vital statistics or land titles, some were found in the records of churches, some came from the Canadian Archives (notably, the records of war veterans), and some information came from other amateur genealogists interested in the Perth area pioneers. To the many individuals who thus added from the contemporary records to which they had access data relevant to the family's history I extend my sincerest thanks.

In such diverse ways the project gradually grew more nearly complete, until information about 420 descendants of John Holliday who bore his surname had been authentically verified. If not unqualifiedly so, the project may be considered reasonably successful. Where errors are found (and doubtless there are some), I wish to accept the responsibility for them and to offer my regrets to those whom they concern.

In the process of constructing the tree I have received from time to time accounts of incidents in the lives of family members which did not warrant inclusion in a family tree. They were always of minor importance for the story as a whole, in most instances perhaps trivial. frequently there was a humorous element in them, however, which threw some light on a custom of the day, a habit of thought, a prejudice or a principle which the particular Halliday held. The best of them - and perhaps the most authentic - were given to me in conversation with those older living members of the family who knew the first or second generations in person. Occasionally they told of pioneer problems overcome in a pioneer way. For me they provide fascinating glimpses into personalities who have in the course of this project become very real to me. Some day they might be gathered together into "Tales of the Hallidays", - not a history, not a biography, just intimate glimpses of very real people.

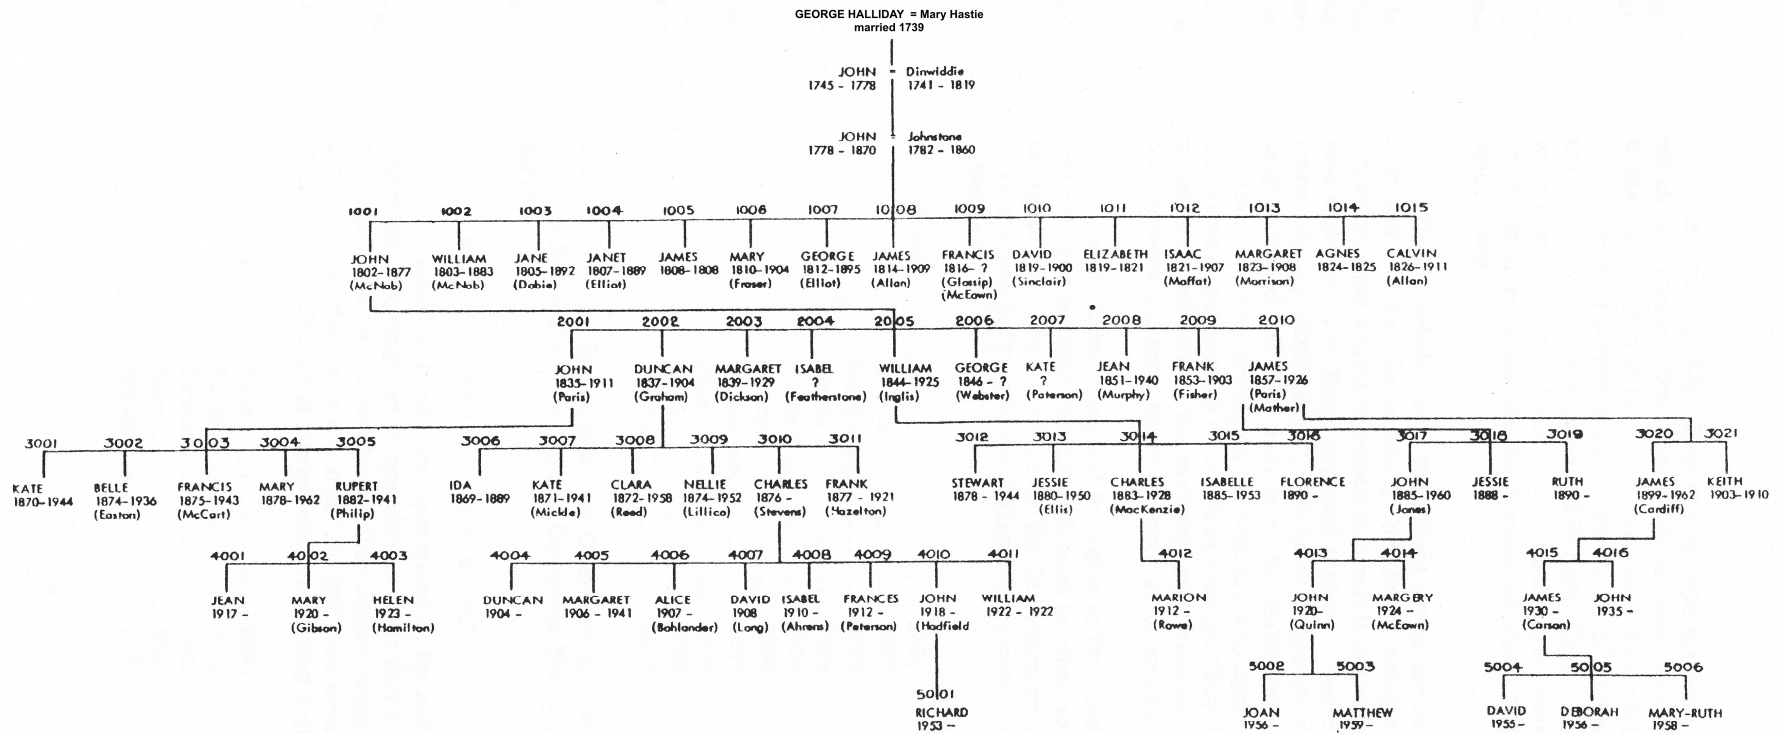

In its very nature, a family tree is not static until it "fails" through the death of its last surviving member. That point is still, apparently, some distance off for this tree. It were desirable if the genealogical charts for it could be left blank below the family's sixth generation members so the names of succeeding ones could be added. This is impracticable. Perhaps, however, the blank pages appended may encourage some members to keep a record of genealogical developments known to them and subsequent to those here reported. Space is also provided for the correction of its errors and the addition of its omissions. Someday a future genealogist of the family would find such notes of great value.

Among the younger generations who may carry on the Halliday family and be interested in its genealogical history are my own grandchildren. The oldest is another John Halliday; the second is Mark; the third is a granddaughter, Janet. As yet they are too young to have developed any deep interest in family lore. Perhaps they may be encouraged by this account of the family to which they belong. I dedicate it, with affection, to John, Mark, and Janet.
